MEMORIAL TABLET TO BE UNVEILED IN HOLLYWOOD

Work of Women of South in Marking Confederate Graves.

UNVEILING DEAD FROM GETTYSBURG

Taylor Ellyson Crump to Unveil Tablet at Exercises To-Morrow Afternoon—Address by General Bennett H. Young.

To many people in Richmond, particularly the younger generation, Memorial Day is a mere form, a summer holiday. But to those who were present at that first Memorial Day forty years ago, it is a solemn, bitter memory, a poignant reminder of one of the most moving scenes that Richmond has ever seen.

Of course, during the war the brave men of both sides were buried, for the most part, just where they fell, hundreds of them in long, shallow trenches. There were no marks of identification what-so-ever. Sometimes a comrade found an opportunity to make some note of exactly where they lay, that their families might have the sorry consolation of the war, of coming to claim their dead. Such was the case, for instance, with Colonel William Haskell, who died at Gettysburg. His two brothers, who were in his regiment, made a note of where his body was placed by the points of the compass, hoping to go back some day and get it. Many years later, with the help of those same sections, they located their brother under a pine tree. Three harvests had gathered over his head.

CONFEDERATE DEAD FROM GETTYSBURG BROUGHT TO HOLLYWOOD

When the war was over the thoughts of every one, naturally, turned toward the men who had lost, and they longed to bring them from the sodden corn fields and gloomy forests where they lay, and see them in consecrated ground. This desire found expression in memorial associations, which sprang up in almost every city in the Confederacy. By every known method, and every imaginable sacrifice, the money for doing this was painfully collected. Mostly by the women of the Confederacy. A plot of ground adjoining Hollywood Cemetery was secured, and the permission of the government to move the soldiers finally obtained. It was the more easily obtained as great numbers of those buried in it, and farmed and seriously interested with agriculture. So a sad delegation went to the field of Gettysburg, where lay thousands of Confederate dead, dug up the mingled bones and laid them in little wooden boxes, and in the unperturbed but the heat of an impoverished city could afford. Richmond has seen no sadder day than that on which the trainloads of these boxes pulled in. Amid the tearful faces of relatives, friends and comrades in arms, the pathetic little boxes that represented so much of the heroism on the field of Gettysburg, were loaded into wagons and sent to the cemetery. There, after a religious service, they were interred, sometimes as many as ten to one into one grave, practically none capable of identification.

ADMISSION REFUSED TO MOVE DEAD FROM ARLINGTON

That was one of the first Memorial Days, but in the hearts of the people it was the day when the women of the long way saw many mourners trudging the long way out, loaded with flowers for the unidentified dead; for Hollywood was in the country then and there was no street car. They told an interesting story of the Confederate graves at Arlington. When admission was first asked to remove a Southern soldier from Arlington, the Southern soldiers from Arlington were refused, and only given after when it was too late to be possible. One day, in the morning, people came out from Washington and decorated the graves of the Union dead who were buried there. That afternoon, ten women from Baltimore came to decorate the graves of the Southern dead, they were refused admission and threatened with violence if they persisted in their efforts to enter. So they were obliged to leave. But that afternoon a terrible wind and rain storm came up, and the morning revealed a range sight. Every minutest vestige of flower and flag had been blown from the Federal graves to those of the Union soldiers, who now rested under a veritable riot of color.

OTHER WOMEN HAVE MARKED AND PRESERVED GRAVES

The work of marking the graves with one block and keeping up the seeing where the soldiers lie has been undertaken, from the beginning, by the Hollywood Memorial Association. Their efforts also are due the appropriation at the last regular session of a general Assembly of Virginia of $100 for the purpose of putting the section in perpetual care of the Hollywood Cemetery Company. Their work this year is to be kept in memory of a handsome tablet of bronze and granite. The unveiling of this will be held at the annual reunion of the Hollywood Memorial Association to-morrow afternoon. The presiding officer will be Colonel W. Gordon McCabe, and the order of events will be as follows: Prayer by Rev. James Power Smith, D. D.

Music in charge of Professor Walter Mercer.
